Background

Veolia and Grameen Health Care Service created a social business named Grameen Veolia Water Ltd in 2008. Its objective is to distribute safe drinking water to the rural communities of Bangladesh that are living in arsenic contaminated areas. Since the beginning, the project has developed a 17 km network that serves approximately 9000 population through private house connections and community tap points. The project delivers WHO standard water quality. The project has a social welfare team that focuses on raising community's awareness on health and hygiene.
